As results continue to be announced, a snapshot reveals a dynamic and competitive year, with established leaders holding their ground and new challengers making a name for themselves.

Frank Giustra's Domenica Fiore is currently the top-ranked Italian brand

With roughly 85 percent of entries analyzed, the 2025 World Olive Oil Competition is already revealing clear leaders and impressive performances among producers from around the world. The real-time data on the Olive Oil Times World Ranking site offer a compelling early look at how the season is shaping up — and which producers are distinguishing themselves on the global stage.

From Europe, Spain's Aceites Oro Bailen Galgon 99 is again demonstrating its pedigree with five awards this year and 45 overall. Italy's Oleificio Asaro dal 1916 has added five more awards in 2025, maintaining its position among the top producers globally.

Portugal's Sociedade Agrícola Ouro Vegetal has had an especially impressive showing, collecting seven awards so far this season.

France, Greece, and Croatia are also well represented in the rankings. Oliviers & Co of France has earned five awards this year, while The Master Miller P.C. of Greece and Avistria d.o.o. of Croatia have added to their totals, showing the strength of Mediterranean producers across the board.

Topping the list of distributors is Manicaretto Italian Food Importers, based in the United States, with a total of 59 awards across past competitions and three already this year. The importer, known for its collection of artisan oils from Italy, continues to maintain its place at the top through consistency and quality.

Also making a strong statement in 2025 is California Olive Ranch, which has already earned nine awards this season, the most of any U.S. producer so far. With 44 total wins to date, the company is cementing its reputation as a force in the American olive oil industry.

Fellow American producers Durant Olive Mill and San Miguel Olive Farm have also had notable showings, with Durant picking up five awards this year and San Miguel four — strong performances that reflect the continued rise of U.S. estate producers.

Among U.S. producers, Queen Creek Olive Mill and IL Fiorello have each earned four or more awards so far in 2025, reflecting growing momentum among family-run and estate-level operations. Gold Ridge Organic Farms, Enzo Olive Oil, and Apollo Olive Oil have each won multiple awards, showcasing the diversity and quality emerging from California's groves in particular.

With 15 percent of entries remaining to be evaluated, the final leaderboard may still shift as additional results are published. For now, this snapshot reveals a dynamic and competitive year, with established leaders holding their ground and new challengers making a name for themselves. As the final results come in, producers, olive oil enthusiasts, and food industry professionals worldwide will be watching closely.
